Duke Forward in Faith Donors Raise $4 Million for DCC

In May Duke University announced that it had passed the $3.25 billion goal of Duke Forward fundraising campaign. As part of Duke Forward, the Duke Catholic Center focused the last eighteen months on raising funds for its own future, with the “Duke Forward in Faith Campaign”. During this time the Catholic Center surpassed its campaign goal and raised over $4 million in pledges and planned gifts including over $3 million in endowment gifts and over $1 million in the annual fund to augment the Center’s income for the coming years.

“As is the case for all charitable organizations, we individually benefitted from the sacrifices of others,” said Michael Somich, the chair of the Duke Catholic Center Advisory Board. “It was our turn to provide for those currently benefitting from the DCC. We believe having additional resources will allow us to engage more students in their faith development.”

One of the lead donors to the campaign, Head Football Coach David Cutcliffe and his wife Karen Cutcliffe emphasized why they decided to invest in the campaign with a $500,000 endowment gift.

“One of the ways to have an impact in the world is to invest in the next generation – college students,” said Coach Cutcliffe. “Karen and I made this gift so that now and in the future students can benefit from their experience at the Duke Catholic Center. We hope that the gift enables the Duke Catholic Center to continue to thrive.”

With significant pledges, the campaign’s early investors gifts are already having an impact in the life of the Catholic Center. These gifts are making a difference through increased programming and resources that Catholic Center has been able to provide across several of the campaign initiatives:

“One of the ways to have an impact in the world is to invest in the next generation - college students,” said Coach Cutcliffe. “Karen and I made this gift so that now and in the future students can benefit from their experience at the Duke Catholic Center. We hope that the gift enables the Duke Catholic Center to continue to thrive.”

Media The Duke Catholic Center hired a Director of Communication in May to allow the DCC to reach students at times and in ways that are convenient for them.

REFLECTIONS FROM FR. MIKE Present

Life on a college campus is a delicate balance in so many ways - none more precarious than the present/future debate.

For so many students the focus is on the future. All of what seems most important lies "out there" whenever I get finished with "this". In an ever quickening pace, students are pushing themselves toward that finish line where a profession will enrich them, a relationship will enfold them, a life will ensure them of the happiness for which we all are striving. And yet, without a powerful commitment to the present, not only will future dreams not become reality, but more importantly, we will miss the beauty of life which is not tomorrow, but rather - today! I must admit, if I need to pick one of the two as more important - the present or the future - I will ere on the side of today, and I think I have Jesus on my side!

If we need a call to greater authority in this argument, who better than the Savior! Even amidst a ministry that continues to call people to an appreciation of the life to come, Jesus consistently reinforces that today is the only way to ensure our hopes for tomorrow. His Incarnation in a moment in history that some would argue insignificant; his reluctance to step on the scene at Cana; his declaration in the temple that "today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing"; his last words on the Cross "It is finished"; these and so much more of his life and ministry all point to powerful moments of now, moments without which the future would be grim. The challenge of living the Good News of Jesus is understanding that a future with him, something so much greater than now, is lived into by a powerful commitment to following him right now. I pray that in the midst of lab work, library study, victories in Wallace Wade, and Greek life that there is sufficient appreciation of the power of now to support our hope for a future that will be so far greater than all of our dreams.

AND FUTURE

This past year has been for me a testament to the power of now that will enable a great future. So many of our Duke Catholic Center supporters accepted the call to secure the future of Catholic life on the campus of Duke University by giving generously to the Cast a Wider Net: Duke Forward in Faith Campaign. Raising just over our goal of $4 million, this effort to begin to endow some of our future was a testament to the belief that tomorrow is promised to none of us. But making sacrificial choices today can not only change our current reality, but it can also fuel hope in an even greater tomorrow. I was blessed to meet personally with so many of you and have been edified by your willingness to sacrifice some of your today for our Duke students' tomorrow. I can't say "Thank You" enough!

I would be remiss if I didn't remain true to my words above. As much as our campaign helped to secure the future, with July 1 came the always present challenge of taking care of today! I am grateful to all those who help us in our Annual Fund - the daily gifts that keep us going and enable us to support our Catholic Dukies. They are a testament to the power of the faith lived today and a strong hope for the faith that will endure long into the future. St. Francis of Assisi, in a moment of gratitude, composed the "Canticle of the Creatures" as a way to list the many things on earth for which he was grateful and praised God. As you read the names in our Annual Report, may you know that these are God creatures for whom I am today and will be in the future, long grateful!!

STUDENT CATECHESIS: BENEFITTING THE Catholic Center and the Worldwide Church

A few years ago, the DCC revolutionized its RCIA program. Instead of hosting one RCIA class once a week, the DCC paired individual catechists with student candidates for one-on-one RCIA and adult Confirmation. This approach allowed the instruction to be more tailored to each student's needs and gap of knowledge in the Catholic faith. It also allowed more students to be involved in the program because they could meet with their catechist at a time that was good for them. Recently, the staff has grown to understand the need for more catechetical training.

"We do a good job offering support and one-on-one meetings with staff for our volunteer catechists," said Campus Minister Catherine Preston. "But we see and need for more support and training and believe our new program could be beneficial all around – in helping our catechists get better themselves, reflect more on the faith and as a result their own faith life, and therefore also hopefully hand on the faith in a fuller, more joyful, lively and engaging way."

The DCC will offer five catechesis classes for students who are interested in becoming catechists. The classes will meet throughout the year. The Center knows training Duke Students will help the church in the long run.

"We know this will benefit the Duke community by benefitting our catechists and candidates," said Catherine. "We also hope and expect this to benefit the Church in the long run by the fact that the Duke Catholic Center will help our graduates to leave with the understanding and capability to walk with someone along the process of asking questions about the Faith and the process of coming into the Church."

Staff EXPANDS AS DCC

In May, and as a result of the increased income from the capital campaign, the Duke Catholic Center added a Director of Communication to the staff. As a result, Emma Miller '11 was promoted into the position.

In her new role, Emma will be in charge of revamping outreach to students via email, social media, mobile phone app, the bulletin, etc. She will also continue to oversee some of the small faith sharing group activities.

"I am incredibly excited about both of these projects – they're both so different," said Emma. "With small groups, I'm excited to see some of our students grow in a very real and important way – taking them from engagement to real discipleship with a heart for sharing their faith with others. I'm also excited to learn more about my new
